From remote islands to unexplored deserts and jungles teeming with wildlife...

In the Gulf of Guinea off the coast of West Africa, the nation of Príncipe is an intimate, discreet island oasis enveloped by enchanting flora and fauna, ocean breezes, and lush tropical forests.

Ecologically-savvy travelers will relish the pristine, well-protected environment as a remarkable base to explore this lost world of beaches, bays, and jungles. Sundy Praia's luxe tented accommodations at the wild northwest tip of the island of Príncipe will help in losing all sense of time and place while searching for turtles, whales, birds, and dolphins. True explorers will enjoy discovering historical churches on biosphere trails hidden throughout the island.

Between September and April, you can check out the incredible hatching of the sea turtles, while year-round you can spot any of the 29 endemic species of birds on the island. When you're not lounging in a private tented villa or on a four-wheel drive through the local plantations, dine at Sundy Praia's terrific restaurant that has adapted local traditions and flavors including tuna, wahoo, passion fruit, and pineapple. A dinner (or two) here is a must.
